Interior and exterior views of the Packard Piano Co., taken about 1906. Present-day Packard Park is located where the factory once stood.

Cityscapes: Playing our song

The Great Chicago Fire may have been the best thing that ever happened to Fort Wayne music lovers.

That may sound strange, but consider this: one of the people who lost everything when the blaze leveled the Windy City on Oct. 9, 1871, was organ-maker Isaac T. Packard.

Legend has it that Packard boarded the next train east and told the conductor to let him off when his money ran out. Packard got as far as Fort Wayne, where he started the Fort Wayne Organ Co. on Nov. 20, 1871. The Fort Wayne Organ Co. in 1899 changed its name to the Packard Piano Co., which, judging by the number of inquiries received by the Allen County Library, may just be Fort Wayne's most fondly remembered industry of them all.

The Fort Wayne Organ Co. set up shop on Fairfield Avenue and began manufacturing "organs which are the most beautiful, attractive and simple in construction of any organ ever offered," according to a story in the Fort Wayne Gazette in March, 1881. The newspaper reported that the locally built instruments possessed a clear, brilliant and sweet tone and were especially popular among missionaries.

So popular were the Packard-built reed organs that England's Queen Victoria supposedly purchased one.

Unfortunately for Packard, there were not that many queens or missionaries around. The company saw that pianos would be a more salable item and began making them in 1893. The name-change followed six years later.

The company became quite successful, hitting its high note in the 1920s. At its peak, the Packard Piano Co. employed more than 300 people at its Fairfield plant.

Then the boom of the 1920s turned into the Depression of the 1930s, and the Packard Piano Co. fell on hard times. The last piano rolled out of the Packard plant on Feb. 6, 1930. The Packard trademark was used by other manufacturers, but the instrument was never again made in Fort Wayne.

Packard Piano Co. was noteworthy in that it was one of the first factories to institute labor reform. Under its "industrial Democracy" program, workdays were shortened to eight hours, working conditions were improved and employees were given better pay for fewer hours of work. The result was an instrument still prized by owners of a brand once respected nationwide but based in Fort Wayne.

The Packard Piano factory was torn down in the early 1930s. The city park department purchased the land in 1937 and today Packard Park stands where Fort Wayne's most musical industry once stood. ■ little auto over narrow, winding, steep roads. Luckily the roads through this territory are hard surfaced, but reverse gear was the only gear that would give us enough power to pull over the bad hills.

"About 25 miles out of Butte, Mont., our ignition failed. It was late at night so we had to camp where the driver stalled. We had been camping out every night, but until this time we had been able to drive far enough each day to find a suitable camp site or tourist camp, which are all well kept in the west.

"One of our boys hopped a ride back to town for the part needed. The next morning we found that we could run the motor on three cylinders.

great lowering mountains. It is a thrill one will never forget to view those rocks and that great cleft in the earth, worn by the incessant waters of the river.

"The irrigation projects, utilizing the melting snows of the mountains, were perhaps the most interesting features of the trip. The huge dams, surpassing anything around this part of the country, the great artificial lakes thus formed and the great conduits for the water from a wonderful system of fooling the weather man. The farmers there have water whenever they want it.

"It was a great trip, and for the amount of money each one of us fellows spent we have been repaid a hundred times. The memories of that trip will always stay with us."

Fort Wayne Young Men Tell of Trip Through West

Marion Woehner, A. F. Ankenbruck and Nick G. Passino Describe Tour Through Seventeen States and Three Countries; Travel 9,253 Miles Through Vast Plains, Hot Deserts and Rough Mountains. "1926"

"Our hats are off to Horace Greeley and the man who originated the saying, 'See America First.' It surely is one gloriously beautiful country," was the unanimous verdict of three Fort Wayne young men who journeyed through 17 states, Mexico and Canada in an open automobile during a 10-weeks tour this summer.

The tourists are Marion Woehner, 315 Erie street; A. L. Ankenbruck, 1811 Lombard street, and Nick Passino, 3005 South Monroe street.

"We started out of Fort Wayne Saturday, July 8, in high spirits and a flivver," they said, in describing the trip. "Our route lay northwest through Chicago to the Delta, Wisconsin, through the Bad Lands to Yellowstone park, from there to the state of Washington and thence to Canada, back along the Pacific coast to Mexico, through the Mohave desert to the Grand Canyon and Colorado Springs, and eventually back home.

"Our travels took us through many national parks, particularly Yellowstone, Yosemite, Grater Lake, Mount Rainier, Oregon Caves, Mount Zion and Bryce Canyon parks.

"In several of the large parks along our way great forest fires were burning. The government fire rangers at these parks have the power to draft unconditionally any and all able-bodied men to fight the fires as long as they are needed. We steered clear of those parks because we had to be back in Fort Wayne 10 weeks after we started and we wanted to cover as much territory as possible.

"The Bad Lands of North Dakota gave us our first tough battle. For almost 14 miles we had to back out below us the entire works.

"Gasoline was as high as 37 cents a gallon in the deserts. Pulling stations were about 75 miles apart. The temperature ranged from 120 to 140 degrees, but the air was so dry that we didn't notice the heat as much as we usually do in Fort Wayne.

"During these hot stretches, we traveled at night and slept and rested during the days. We were traveling about 200 to 300 miles each day, so we were always ready to flop down on any stretch of sand or a blanket had snatch a nap.

"We believe the most astounding attraction of the trip was the Grand Caanyon of Arizona. It would be impossible for us to describe its miles of beautifully colored rocks and cliffs with the narrow silver thread of the river hundreds of feet below us winding between them

It was also in 1889 that St. Patrick's congregation was formed, with Father Thomas O'Leary appointed pastor. O'Leary immediately began negotiating for the purchase of a church site between Harrison and Webster streets, but died three weeks after his appointment.

Father Joseph Delaney, who was then appointed pastor, completed the real estate deal for the half-square lot fronting DeWald, and in April of the following year conducted a groundbreaking service. Bishop Dwenger, in his last public appearance (his health was failing), laid the cornerstone in May.

The church, also of Gothic design, was dedicated in November 1891. A nine-room school and assembly hall also were built that year.

Elegy for old St. Pat's

LAGRO — On a steep bank on the north side of the Wabash River, about mid-way between Huntington and Wabash, exists an old, red-brick Catholic church that has presided inconspicuously over the last 110 years of history in the upper Wabash Valley.

The oldest parish in the Roman Catholic Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend, it is called St. Patrick's and its congregation dates to 1838 through 34 resident priests to the first black-robed Jesuits who traversed the area enroute from Montreal to Vincennes via the Wabash River. It is, in essence, a memorial to the heritage of Catholicism in the early 1800s and to the Irish canal-builders who settled in Lagro in the 1830s after building the Wabash & Erie Canal.

Old St. Pat's, mother parish of the Wabash Valley, is a weathered edifice on a Lagro side street that's never made the National Register of Historic Places. It would qualify easily. But that's not been an issue. Though its congregation has dwindled from a peak of 300 to no more than 10 families (about 50 people) and it hasn't had a resident priest in three years, St. Pat's is still a functioning parish.

In a way.

The Rev. Richard Urbine, pastor of St. Robert's Catholic Church of North Manchester, administers the church, keeping track of the budget and other affairs. Parish priests from Huntington, Roanoke and elsewhere volunteer for weekly Sunday Masses, conducted relatively late in the day, 12:30 p.m., so that the priests can also conduct services in their home churches. The Rev. James R. Rose, now retired, last served the parish. And Urbine says the part-time pastor arrangement will continue "because there is just a shortage of priests right now."

Ironically, this part-time system is similar to the way in which the church was managed in the 1840's when the Rev. Julian Benoit served the Lagro parish along with those in Huntington, Columbia City, Warsaw, Goshen and numerous other cities. Benoit was active among the Indian tribes of the area; he earned their trust and for a time monitored business transactions between them and the often devious French fur traders. Similarly, the Rev. Maruice de St. Palais served the congregation from Logansport from 1844 to 1846.

It was during this era that merchants and farmers from as far as Muncie on the south and Goshen to the north, in need of inexpensive canal connections for freight transport to the Atlantic seaboard, flocked to Lagro with loads of wheat and corn. It was also during this period that Lagro served as home for a number of substantial Catholic families—the Ryans, the McIntyres, McGuires and Reagans among them. Most of the remaining members of these families died in the mid-1900s and were buried in the picturesque Catholic cemetery on a prominent knoll north of town.

Today, a parish group still meets bi-monthly in the rectory next door to care for the sanctuary and to promote parish suppers. There is no parish council. Instead, the whole congregation is invited to meet in regular sessions and to participate in the parish business.

Weekly catechism classes no longer are conducted because there are only two grade-school-age children in the congregation. It is for these reasons that Urbine refers to St. Pat's as a "dying parish."

About the only person in daily contact with the church, a beautiful Gothic structure built in 1873 after the congregation outgrew a nearby frame church, is caretaker Leo Bever, 88, a retiree from a local rock wool plant who lives next door. As a child, Bever, a lifetime member of the church, used to ring the old bell in the steeple for funerals and Mass. And he remembers hand-pumping the organ in the loft in back while someone else played.

The organ, vandalized and dismembered, now is in pieces; it has been replaced by a less impressive electric model stationed in front. As for the bell, which was hauled here in the 1840s by wagon from Buffalo, N.Y., it is rung only occasionally today. Bever no longer will climb the winding stairs to ring it.

But he still takes great pride in the church, with its frescos and 38-foot ceilings and the stain-glass rendering of St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, in front. Built for $20,000 in 1873, designed to seat 600, it has vaulted side walls, a high-domed ceiling and sturdy oak pews.

Bever keeps the large brass key that opens the imperious front door. And every Saturday, when Urbine arrives to light the gas furnace for Sunday services, Bever meets him with wine and water.

And so it is at dying old St. Pat's, only a stone's throw from the old canal bed and the remains of its diggers who once gave the church its life.

A few years after the formation of St. Vincent's parish, Catholics in the northwestern part of the city took steps to form their own congregation. A meeting of about 35 families was held in November 1863, and Bishop Luers approved their subsequent request to form their own parish.

Two years later, the families purchased the property on the southeast corner of Griffith Street (now Fairfield Avenue) and Washington Boulevard, and built St. Paul's Catholic Church.

The Rev. Edward Koenig was appointed first pastor of the church in December 1865, and the priest opened a parochial school a year later. Louis Weiser was the first teacher of the St. Paul's school, attended by 68 children.

The present church building was erected in 1866 at a cost of about $55,000.

Also of Roman style architecture, the church was furnished with solid oak furniture and seats about 600.

St. Paul's Catholic Church, photographed here some time after the turn of the century, was built in the late 1800s for parishioners in what was then the northwest part of the city.

Wilderness town drew Lutherans

First in a series on the Lutheran Church in Fort Wayne.
By DICK ISENHOUR
Of The News-Sentinel

Much is owed to Henry Rudisill for the formation of the first Lutheran Church in Fort Wayne.

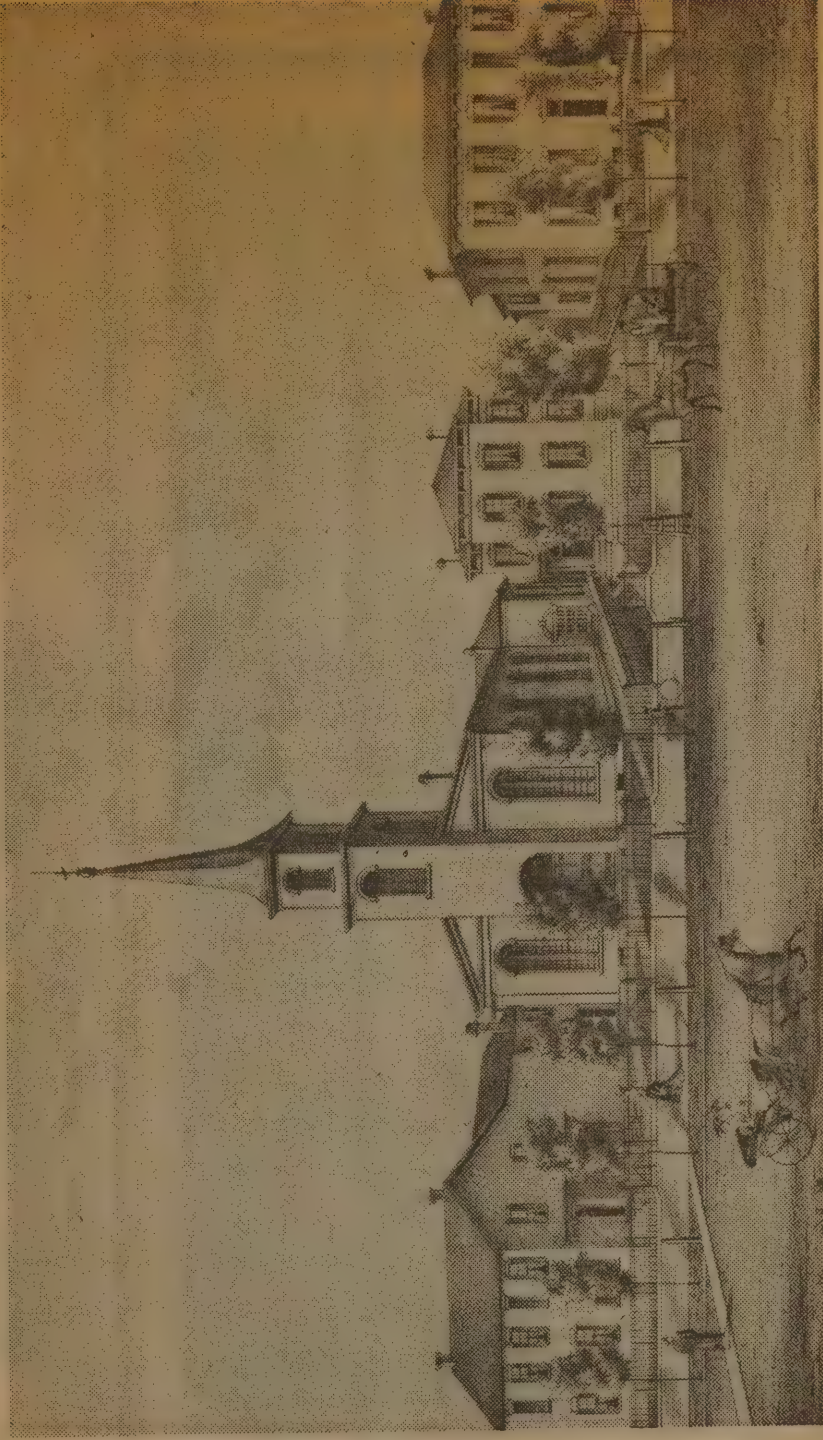

Rudisill was among the first German Lutherans to immigrate here when Fort Wayne was still a wilderness town in 1830. An entrepreneur, Rudisill opened a saw-mill and flour mill along Spy Run Boulevard, across from what is now the Indiana & Michigan Electric Co. complex. He later opened a flax seed oil mill and northern Indiana's first woolen factory.

His leadership abilities were evident in the enterprises he formed, and his spiritual leadership was demonstrated when he established a spiritual home for himself and his family.

Fort Wayne in 1830 was a small town with crude, unpainted buildings generally of one story. About 150 persons inhabited the city, most of them French fur traders and Indians.

Rudisill was one of few Lutherans of German descent in Fort Wayne. He could have joined the little missions of other denominations that had been established in Fort Wayne, but wrote to a mission society in the East instead, asking for new Lutheran immigrants to come to Fort Wayne.

After a few had arrived, Rudisill advertised in an eastern church paper for a Lutheran pastor, and the call was answered by the Rev. Jesse Hoover. The year was 1836, and Hoover and Rudisill were able to get the Lutheran Church in Fort Wayne started.

St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church, parsonage and school building, circa 1862.

In October 1837, Hoover convened a historic meeting in the Allen County Courthouse, attended by Rudisill and the heads of 23 other Lutheran families. During the meeting, the congregation of what was called the First Evangelical Lutheran Church in Indiana was officially organized.

The congregation, comprising about 65 persons, conducted services in the court house for a year, but members feared the dilapidated building could collapse on them at any time so services were moved to a school house near Harrison and Superior streets.

With Hoover's death in 1838, Rudisill watched over the church while a search was conducted for a new pastor. Several months later, the Rev. Frederick Conrad Dietrich Wyneken, delegated by the Pennsylvania Synod to look after the needs of German Protestants in all of Indiana, came to Fort Wayne as part of his mission work.

The congregation immediately asked the minister to stay on and, with permission from the Synod, he agreed to do so. Under his leadership, a tract of land near Barr and Madison streets (1126 S. Barr) was purchased in 1839, and a simple, frame church building erected.

Parish membership quickly grew and soon the congregation was too large for the quaint, frame structure. So a new building was erected in 1847. It was also about this time the parish adopted its present name, St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Continued growth blessed the church, resulting in the construction of an addition to the church, and two daughter congregations branching off to form new parishes.

Wyneken was succeeded in the pastorate by the Rev. William Sihler who was joined by the Rev. Henry Sauer in 1875. Sauer later became pastor and under his direction, the magnificent cathedral-like structure now adorning Barr and Madison streets was built. Although the cornerstone of the church says 1889, the building, saved for the exterior walls, was completely rebuilt after a disastrous fire in 1903.

UPFRONT CITYSCAPES

Church grew along with population

Last in a series on the Catholic Church
By DICK ISENHOUR
Of The News-Sentinel

The late 1800s were times of growth for Fort Wayne and the Catholic Church. From 350 residents in 1830, the city's population grew to more than 30,000 by 1880, creating a need for more churches.

Two new parishes were formed about that time. One was St. Peter's Catholic Church, 518 E. DeWald St.

On a November evening in 1871, several members of St. Mary's Church, itself an offshoot of St. Augustine's (the city's first Catholic church), met in an engine house in what was then the Seventh Ward (formerly called Frenchtown), to discuss forming a new congregation. They decided a new parish should be formed and agreed to call it St. Peter's, placing it under the special protection of the leader of the Apostles.

With blessings from Bishop Joseph Dwenger, three lots were purchased to form St. Peter's Square, bounded on the north by St. Martin's Street, on the east by Hanna, on the south by DeWald and on the west by Warsaw. A history of the Catholic Church in Fort Wayne notes that a fourth lot was donated by Father John Wemhoff, whom Dwenger appointed pastor of the new church in 1872.

The first building was a brick structure costing about $10,000. The first floor housed St. Peter's School which accommodated 250 students. The church, with seating for 300, was on the second floor.

The cornerstone of the building was laid in the spring of 1872, and the building was dedicated the following December.

The present church building was erected in 1892-93, under the pastorate of Father Anthony Messman, who succeeded Wemhoff. Of Gothic design, the structure was built at a cost of about $65,000 and could seat three times as many persons as the original church.

ACTIVE DIRECTOR IN MUSIC CIRCLES

Mrs. Isabelle McClure Peltier (1881-1961) was a former leader in Fort Wayne's Morning Musical, Community Concerts Association, and served on the boards of the Civic Symphony and Philharmonic Orchestra. And for many years she was active in many phases of social and civic life in Fort Wayne.

Mrs. Peltier was a gifted artist and for a time taught piano. She was a dynamic leader and helped to bring some of the finest concert artists to Fort Wayne. She was a graduate of Westminster Seminary and European School of Music.

Mrs. Peltier's estate provided large gifts for Fort Wayne Fine Arts, First Presbyterian and Trinity Episcopal Churches. She rests in Lindenwood, one of America's great cemeteries where there will always be adequate burial facilities for future generations.

The Pennells

Charles V. and Evelyn (Blauser) Pennell of Fort Wayne and Snow Lake, Ind., will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary with a family dinner at the Back Forty Restaurant in Decatur, Ind. They were married Jan. 1, 1935, in the Little Chapel in the Garden in Angola by the Rev. John Humphries, pastor of the First Congregational Church in Angola. It was a double wedding with her sister, Esther Blauser, and Versel Rathbun. The little chapel was a very popular place for weddings at that time. Born in Steuben County, Ind., the Pennells attended grade school in a one-room school and graduated from Fremont (Ind.) High School in 1928 and 1930. Mr. Pennell entered the General Electric apprentice program in 1928 in Schenectady, N.Y., and finished in 1932. He worked at various G.E. plants before retiring in 1973 after 45 years of service. He was a consultant for G.E. and other firms in the United States and Europe and, after retirement, in Singapore. The Pennells visited several other countries and islands during their time in Singapore. Evelyn Pennell was formerly employed by Sears, Roebuck & Co. The couple Charles V. Pennell, a manufacturing engineer for Specialty Motor-Broadway, elected to retire May 1. His GE career began in Schenectady, N.Y. in 1928 as an apprentice toolmaker. While receiving his GE pension check, he plans to relax.

An early 1900's view of the Pennsy Shops, stretching east off South Clinton (where the main post office stands today).

City once major railroad center

The great expanse of the main post office complex between Clinton and Lafayette streets is an impressive facility. Yet, not very long ago this large area was the central part of a much larger operation — the "Pennsy Shops."

These locomotive and railroad car shops extended east from Clinton for nearly three miles, along the Penn Central tracks, to Moeller Road on the edge of the city.

For nearly half a century, from the Civil War until just past the turn of the century, Fort Wayne was one of the most important railroad centers in the country. At one time, along the Pennsy line alone, 50 trains a day stopped here. This is one every half hour on just one of the seven railways in town.

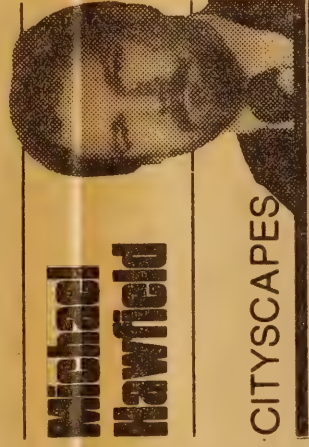

What made Fort Wayne especially important was the complex of shops where locomotives and cars were designed, built, tested and repaired or overhauled. Hundreds of grand and workaday locomotives and thousands of railroad cars were built here. Here, too, were the "West Enders," those railroaders who, with the brim of their caps characteristically turned up, took immense pride in pushing the great steam engines (and themselves) to maximum performance. And there were hundreds of craftsmen who built some of the most luxurious passenger cars in the nation.

The shops themselves were the central feature of all this activity, and they were a part of the very beginnings of railroading in Fort Wayne.

In 1852, even before a train had ever been seen here, Samuel Hanna, a director of the first area railroad, donated five acres east of Clinton Street for shop grounds. The next year, in 1853, John and Charles Coo-

Pullman was refined to produce the "Fort Wayne Silver Palace Car." This beautiful sleeping car sat on the best springs available for a quiet ride, and was carpeted inside with the richest brightly colored moquette (carpet with a velvety pile), to match the velvet upholstery of the silver-armed seats. Silver bars and silver designs highlighted the brightly painted ceiling. All the woodwork was well-oiled black walnut with gold trimmings; the silver lamps held fine cut glass globes. An adjustable table could be set up between the seats, and a mirror set between the windows could be made to disappear with the push of a spring, to be automatically replaced by a silver lamp.

In two years, between 1867 and per purchased land east of Barr Street, put up some buildings (a blacksmithy, foundry and machine shop), and organized the first railroad shop as Cooper and Company. Sion Bass, the later Civil War hero, bought into the operation in 1854, making it the Cooper, Bass and Company Shops, but in 1857, these private interests sold out to the newly formed railroad company, the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Line (later the Pennsylvania Railroad).

The "Pittsburgh Shops," as they were then known, grew rapidly with the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861. Many additional buildings, including a roundhouse, were built, and in 1863 a grand ball was held in the new main shop building. Locomotive lights, colored lanterns, and 375 gas jets lit the huge "dance hall" as 75 sets of dancers at a time waltzed to the music of Professor Sturby's Union Band.

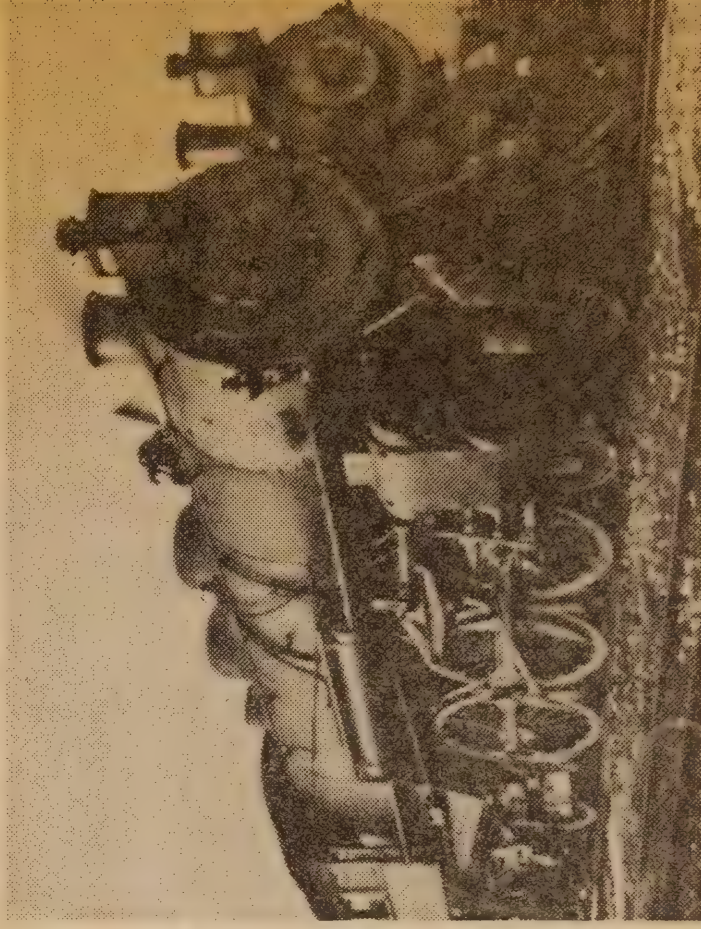

Under full production, these shops, in concert with the new Bass Foundry across the tracks, provided considerable war material for the Union armies.

After the Civil War, railways throughout the nation expanded greatly, and the demand for better engines and cars was redoubled. In Fort Wayne, the basic design of the 1869, seven of these cars were built in Fort Wayne at a cost of $18,000 each.

Locomotives were built here, too. Under the direction of Master mechanic James Boone, these engines assumed a leading position in the railroading world of the 1870s. "Boone Built" locomotives broke many performance records, frequently reaching speeds of 60 miles per hour. In 1870, railroaders everywhere were stunned to learn of the run made by Number 199 between Fort Wayne and Chicago. Engineer Tony Kelker pushed the passenger train to 75 miles per hour, and his picture with the engine was hung in railroad offices throughout the country as an example of engineering.

Although not designed in Fort Wayne, Pennsylvania system's superb Class X locomotive, more reasonably called the Penn Engine (after its maker), was built in the Pennsy Shops between 1892 and 1907. Twenty-eight were produced in one lot alone. These were high performance engines. One, for instance, left Fort Wayne in 1900 with a heavy passenger load, made all its scheduled runs, and yet arrived in Chicago only 14 minutes off the appointed time.

Among the last locomotive design successes in the Fort Wayne Shops was that of "Fat Annie." This was a huge engine much bigger than those normally found on the Midwestern lines. "Fat Annie" was the pride of Fort Wayne in the early decades of this century, and the acceptance of her design over that of competitors in Pennsylvania, Pa., (the Fort Wayne of the east) led many jobs in Fort Wayne. It was a temporary victory for those fighting for "Fat West" freedom from eastern domination of the company.

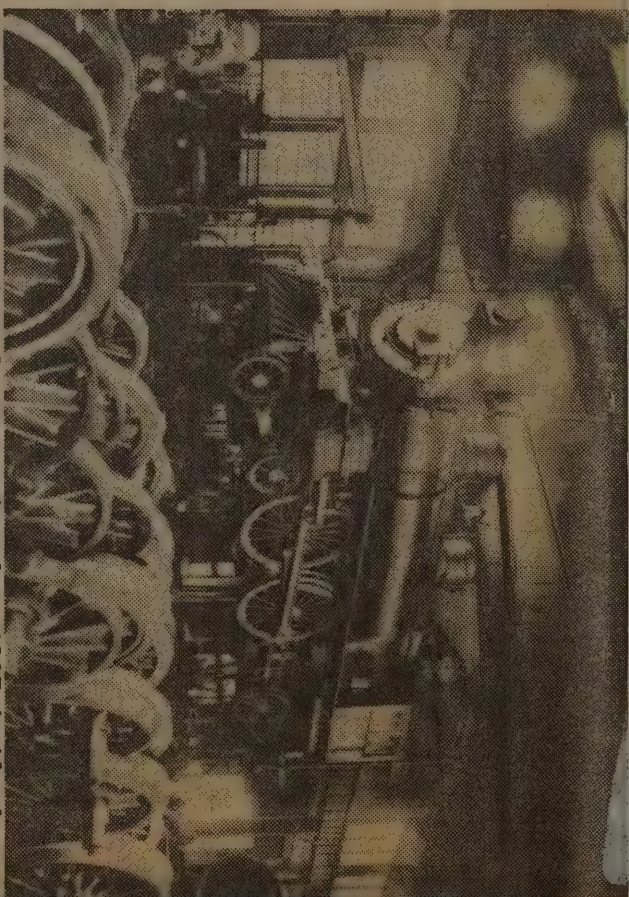

Even as late as the 1930s "Fat Annie" kept the imagination of railroaders. One of the fireman named Harvey Lehman, grew up in a railroading family on Calhoun Street, built a large model of this engine in 1929 while convalescing from an accident. Using the very materials used at Pennsy Shops, including the black and white paint for the engines, Harvey named "Fat Annie" with the loving attention to detail of a man who daily worked machinery. Every Christmas he set up the model train for his family and friends; by it is part of the Christmas display in the Historical Museum.

Thanks to the research of Walter Sassmannshausen, a history teacher at Geyer Middle School, we have a vivid image of working conditions in the Pennsy Shops early in this century, especially in the blacksmith areas. There, the smoke of the coke and wood furnaces was so thick a worker could not see the man next to him. Everything was made there, from the bolts and rivets to the axles and frames for the locomotives; only the car wheels came from the nearby Bass Foundry. Work crews were set up under a foreman for eight-hour shifts. If the foreman were Irish, the crew would all be Irish; if he were German, his crew would all be German, and so on. The men were inclined to stick to the old methods of production and were not always interested in new ways, as when air hammers were proposed to replace the three-man crews that traditionally worked the rivets.

Fort Wayne no longer made locomotives after World War I, and much of the locomotive work in the Pennsy Shops turned to repair and overhauling. One of the engines overhauled was Engine Number 7002 which in 1905 had set the record for American passenger speed at 127 miles per hour (between Crestline, Ohio, and Fort Wayne), a record which still stands today.

Old No. 7002 was refitted in Fort Wayne early in the 1920s and was to be shown off at the grand opening of the Chicago Union Station on June 23, 1925, serving as the special train for the Pennsy Shop Band, which toured everywhere on the system. With Engineer Charlie Sommers at the throttle, the refurbished champion set yet another local record for speed on the straight line between Fort Wayne and Chicago. This was much to the discomfort of the band members who complained "that the wooden cars bounced, bucked and rolled so violently that (they) feared the roofs would peel back."

Besides the band, the Pennsy Shops boasted many other company activities. One of the most popular was the Pennsy Shops baseball club which played regularly at the field where today the Old Fort Supply Co. is located, on South Anthony Boulevard. Sometimes, semi-professional teams played the Pennsy club. Each year, also, the company sponsored a "field day" at the Driving Park near State Boulevard and Florida Drive, where sulky racing was a favorite.

After locomotive rebuilding in Fort Wayne was stopped in 1933, the Pennsy Shops continued to produce new built cars. But the shops declined after World War II. A few locomotives were serviced in Fort Wayne for things as the Chicago Railroad Park 1948-49 and for an exhibition of engines in 1950. But the Air Brakes shop was closed in 1953, and portions of the property were sold from time to time the next decade, until 1966 when the final site along Clinton was abandoned.

By the mid-1970s, all that remained were the East End Car Shops by Trace. This past summer, the old house, perhaps the most symbolic of the once great Fort Wayne railroad complex, was torn down.

First steam engine had barge trip

By DICK ISENHOUR

Of The News-Sentinel

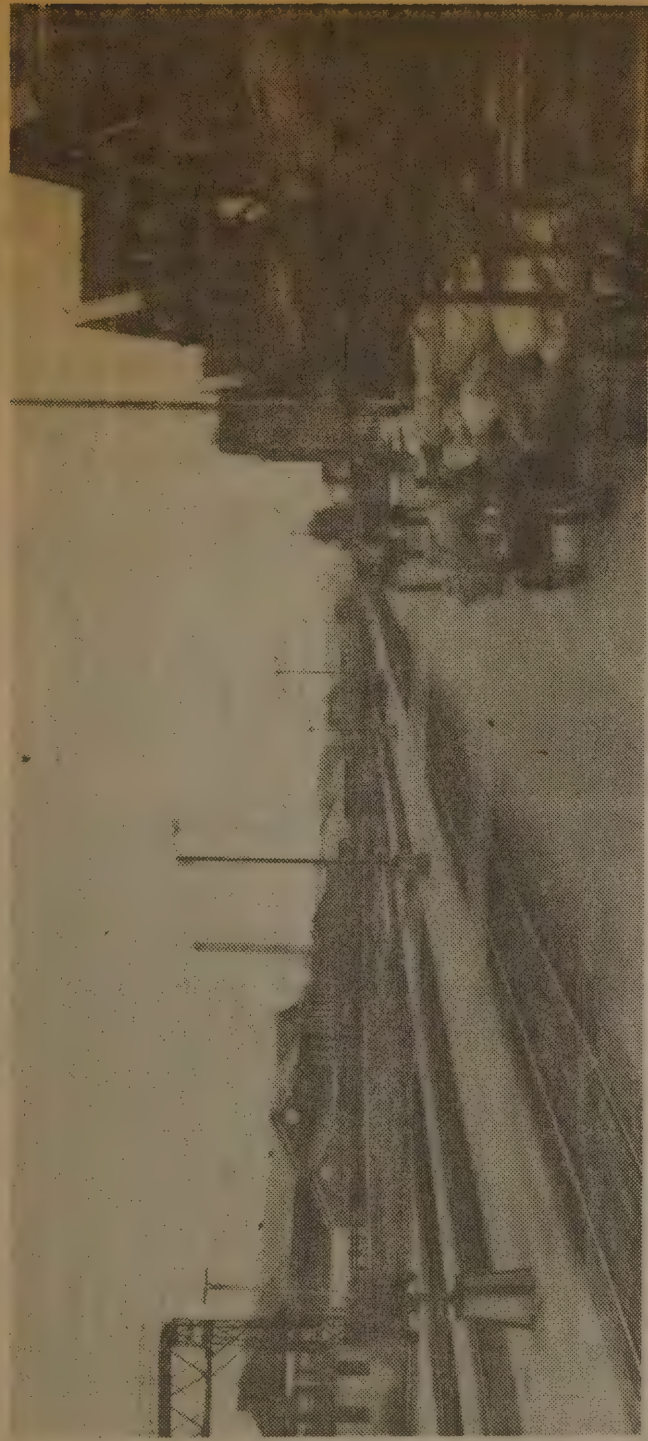

Irony's tracks are found throughout the story of the railroad's arrival in Fort Wayne.

It was a barge that brought to the city the first steam engine, a mammoth vehicle that would eventually replace the canals as a means of transportation. And it was an official of the canal system who was among the first supporters of construction of a railroad line in the city.

Rail transportation was pioneered here in 1854, when R. W. Wohlfort, a Pennsylvania railroad official, pulled the throttle on the first steam engine in this city. Wohlfort accompanied the dismantled iron horse as it made its way by barge along the Wabash & Erie Canal. He also oversaw the delicate job of unloading the pieces of the steam engine at the depot, which was then located at the corner of Lafayette and Columbia streets. (Historians note no record was kept as to how the engine was unloaded from the barge.)

Then, with screwdriver and other tools in hand, Wohlfort spent the next few days assembling the engine, to the delight of large and curious crowds, which grew even larger every day.

Finally, the great day arrived and it was time to officially christen Fort Wayne's newest attraction. But in addition to the enthusiastic townspeople and folks from all over the area, there were many in the crowd who were actually terrified at the sight and sounds of the day. Great clouds of smoke bellowed forth from the steam engine, and with a loud puffing, the engine moved down the track.

Teams off frightened horses bolted from the area, and many a person positioned along the track for a good view jumped back, some of them running away.

The arrival of the engine ended several years of planning to make Fort Wayne a vital link in the rail system. The groundwork began in 1847, when Jesse Williams, chief engineer of the Wabash-Erie Canal, began pushing for construction of a rail line connecting Fort Wayne with Pittsburgh, Pa., on the east, and Chicago on the west.

As a result, the Ohio & Indiana Railroad was formed in July 1850 and plans were made to lay the tracks, with funding of $100,000 to be raised through a tax levy. Construction of the miles of track needed started in January 1851 and the line was completed in stages as money and supplies became available.

The eastern leg of the line was completed in the early 1850s, with the exception of a 16-mile stretch between Monroeville and Van Wert, Ohio. In the years before construction of this section was completed, pioneer merchants would still have to make annual shopping trips east. This was accomplished by riding the rails as far as Monroeville, hopping a stagecoach to Van Wert, and then boarding another train for the completion of the trip.

Construction of the section from Fort Wayne to Chicago, undertaken by a second railway operation, the Fort Wayne & Chicago, was also a tough endeavor. The line was completed as far as Plymouth by 1854 but work was halted when money ran out. Work resumed in 1856, and the remainder of the leg was completed.

Also in that year, the Ohio & Indiana Railroad consolidated with the Fort Wayne & Chicago and the Pennsylvania & Ohio to form the Pennsylvania Railroad. The new rail company emerged as a moving force in transportation and saw many prosperous years in the late 1800s and early 1900s.

Fort Wayne was a major artery in the Pennsylvania line, and the company was the first to build a station here. It was constructed in 1889 between Calhoun and Clinton streets.

Cityscapes: Pennsy shops

Editor's note: This article is the eighth in a series on important industries in early Fort Wayne.

Next to the entrance to the new downtown post office, a small black-on-white marker stands almost unnoticed by people hurrying to buy a stamp or mail a letter.

The marker contains just a few words, but they tell of one of Fort Wayne's most important early industries: the Pennsylvania Railroad.

"For 100 years — until the early 1950s — the Pennsylvania Railroad used this site for construction and repair of rolling stock," the marker reads. "Three hundred locomotives and 12,000 cars were designed and built here."

Today, just that lonesome plaque is left to tell of the Pennsy Shops which once spanned several blocks and employed more than 1,000 people.

The shops began to grow in importance in September 1857, when they were sold to the forerunner of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago line, by Jones, Bass & Co. The Bass in the company's name was Sion Bass, brother of John Bass, owner of Fort Wayne's famed Bass Foundry. The Bass Foundry was for a time the world's largest maker of railroad wheels and was a major supplier of the Pennsy Shops.

Major buildings were completed in 1863. But the real rail boom came in the years following the Civil War. The Fort Wayne shops during this time turned out some of the most ornate rail passenger cars ever made. The interiors contained carved wood and silver-plated accessories.

The locomotives were basically of medium and small design. Although relatively small, these Fort Wayne-built engines were also very fast and for years held railroad speed records. Fort Wayne, in fact, produced the smallest locomotive on the Pennsy system's rails. It weighed just 51,900 pounds. The much larger "Fat Annie" locomotives were not constructed in Fort Wayne, but they were designed here.

Engine construction in Fort Wayne came to a halt near the turn of the century. The bigger, heavier locomotives made the local shops too small to handle both construction and repair.

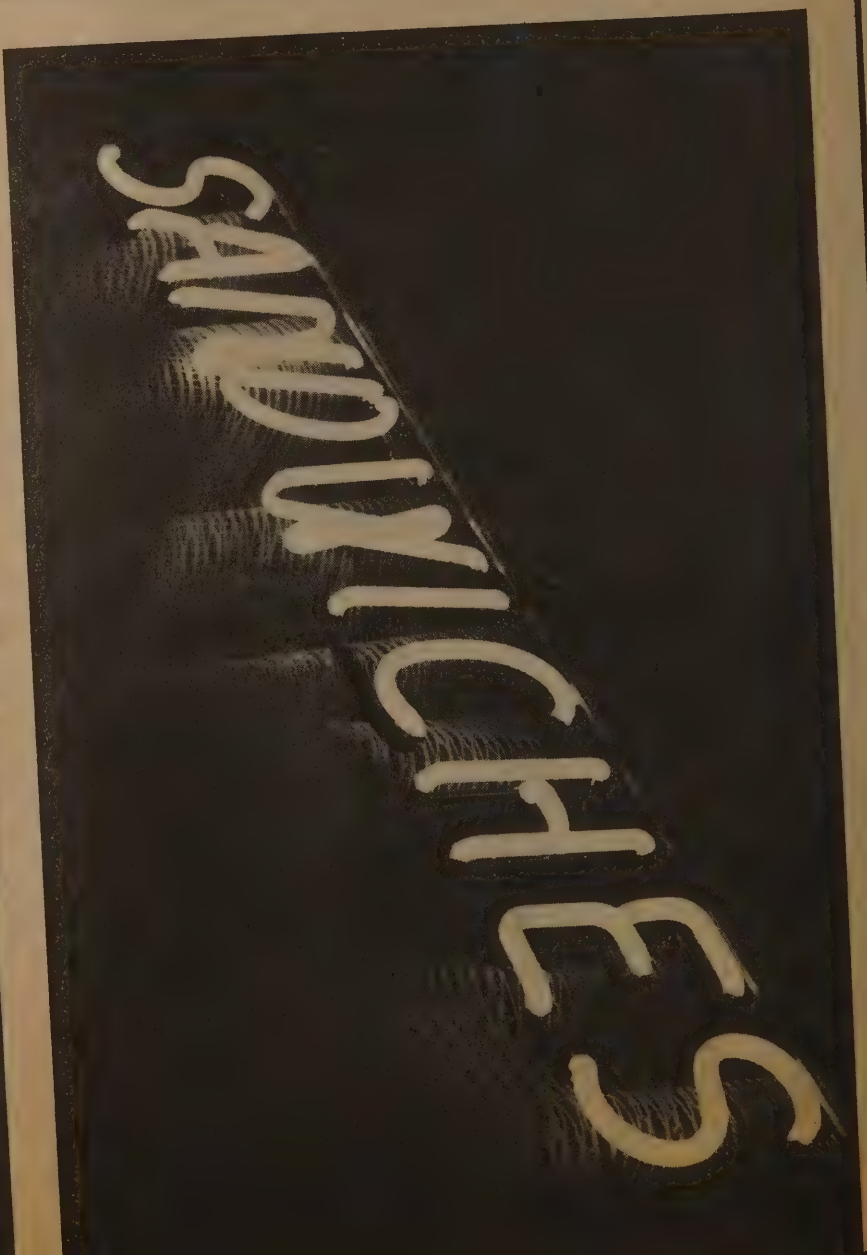

Built adjacent to the shops in 1860 was the original Pennsy Depot. The depot was closed in 1914, but not before it was visited around 1860 by Abraham Lincoln. A brief stop at the depot is the only recorded visit here by Lincoln. The depot was razed in 1966. In its final years it was owned by Grieger Chevrolet; its lot used to store used cars.

The Pennsy Shops continued locomotive repairs through the Great Depression. Car maintenance continued for a few years after that. But the handwriting was on the wall; operations here were dying.

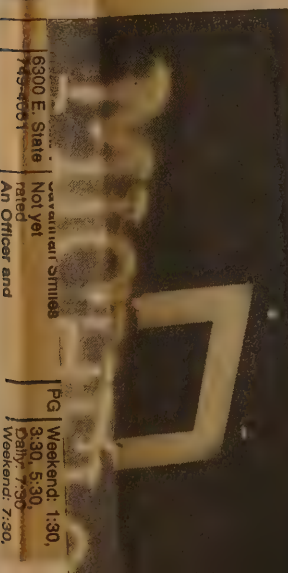

In the mid-50s, the massive complex between Clinton and Lafayette was sold piecemeal. Grieger bought the depot in 1957; Lincoln Life bought the machine and blacksmith shops and tore them down for parking space. International Harvester purchased the largest buildings, and much of their original rail equipment was finally vandalized or stolen. The last of the complex's buildings came down shortly before work on the new postal facility began in the late 1970s. ■

After 50 years

doon; seated on arms of davenport, William E. McCarthy, Joseph B. Dillon, Robt. E. Morris, Paul B. Kallmyer; seated, Brother Andrew, James M. Smith, Eugene C. Pequignot, Brother Vitus, Frederick E. Steinbacher; on floor, Lawrence J. Pepe and James A. DeWald.

50th anniversary remindful of the gifts of Library Hall

A man of proven foresight, Bishop Herman J. Alerding converted majestic Library Hall on Cathedral Square into Central Catholic High School; that was 67 years ago.

His conviction was that academics were not enough, that purely secular training failed to persuade men of their duties toward God, their fellow men and themselves. Thus, he proceeded to correlate religion and the regular high school study. At the time, New York's juvenile delinquency was attracting nationwide attention—a remote situation but one in which the head of the Fort Wayne Catholic Diocese likely foresaw a growing challenge in the future.

Not co-educational in the beginning, Central Catholic of Library Hall started off in 1909 with an enrollment of 42 young men. By 1914 it had been fully accredited by the State Department of Public Instruction.

Brothers of the Holy Cross Order were selected by the bishop to teach the regular curriculum and two secular priests were given the responsibility of Christian Doctrine.

Library Hall was the school remembered by 24 men who shared a dinner program at Club Olympia recently to commemorate the 50th anniversary of their high school graduation. Joining the Class of 1925 were two of three members of the regular faculty who survive. There were 51 members of that class and 26 of them are still living.

The honored faculty guests were Brother Andrew, C.S.C., (science and Latin) and Brother Vitus), C.S.C. (English and faculty supervisor of The Echo, a quarterly publication.) Both in their 80's, they are now of St. Joseph College and the University of Notre Dame.

Central Catholic did not become co-educational until it left Library Hall in the late 1930's for the new high school complex nearby and the Brothers relinquished their academic responsibilities. The school continued to make significant contributions to education until about five years ago when the changing pattern of the city affected its enrollment and its students were apportioned to other Catholic high schools of the city. In an irony of progress, the empty halls are being eyed as the site for a parking lot!

Library Hall, an imposing three-story structure with cathedral lines, was built in 1880 by Father Joseph H. Brammer, leader of the Cathedral Parish for many years and vicar general, as a library and parish hall for his church. It stood on the present site of the McDougall Memorial and was razed after the opening of the new high school building. For a time prior to its use as a high school, Library Hall sheltered a commercial school for young women.

The main floor of the structure was extensively remodeled to provide classrooms and excellent facilities for laboratory work in chemistry and physics as well as other branches of science. There was space on the second floor for a gymnasium and Central Catholic became respected in athletics as well as academics.

After their duties ended at Library Hall, Brothers Vitus and Andrew spent 40-odd years as missionaries to Bengal, once a province of British India which was divided between India and Pakistan in 1948. A third surviving member of the faculty of '25 is Brother Neil, also of South Bend, whose health would not permit attending the function here.

Brothers Andrew and Vitus motored to the city with one of their former students. They preferred lowered windows to the car's air-conditioning; they were conditioned to heat and comfortable with it—for them 40 degrees was "just cool." In health and other ways they remained examples to their former students. Their escort learned that Brother Andrew, a few days earlier, had taken it upon himself to help patch the roof of one of the college buildings.

Library Hall has been gone for many years but its influence upon the community undoubtedly still persists through students who climbed the many steps to its entrance and their descendants.

For those who studied under the Brothers there, Library Hall remains a privileged memory.

1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It is essential for the business to have a clear and concise record of all income and expenses in order to determine the true financial position of the company. This record should be kept up to date and should be available for review at any time.

2. The second part of the paper discusses the importance of having a good system of internal control. This system should be designed to prevent errors and fraud, and to ensure that all transactions are properly recorded and classified. It should also be designed to provide a means of checking the accuracy of the records and of the financial statements.

3. The third part of the paper discusses the importance of having a good system of external control. This system should be designed to prevent errors and fraud, and to ensure that all transactions are properly recorded and classified. It should also be designed to provide a means of checking the accuracy of the records and of the financial statements.

4. The fourth part of the paper discusses the importance of having a good system of internal control. This system should be designed to prevent errors and fraud, and to ensure that all transactions are properly recorded and classified. It should also be designed to provide a means of checking the accuracy of the records and of the financial statements.

5. The fifth part of the paper discusses the importance of having a good system of external control. This system should be designed to prevent errors and fraud, and to ensure that all transactions are properly recorded and classified. It should also be designed to provide a means of checking the accuracy of the records and of the financial statements.

Morris R. Perry, 73, owner and operator of Chalfant-Perry-Klaehn Funeral Home before retiring in 1964, died Tuesday in Tucson, Ariz., where he resided the past five years.

Mr. Perry, a native of Alexandria, came to Fort Wayne in 1914 and became associated with the funeral home in 1935 with his stepfather, the late Frank Chalfant.

Also an artist, he did art work, including art for newspaper advertising, for Lindenwood Cemetery. He was a graduate of Central High School and of Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

He was a member of the First Wayne Street United Methodist Church, a past master of Summit City Lodge 170, F&AM, and a member of the Scottish Rite, Mizpah Shrine Temple, Jento, and IOOF Lodge 14.

Surviving are his wife, Marian J.; a daughter, Mrs. David F. Burr, of Kennett Square, Pa., and a sister, Mrs. Harold J. Buist, West Hartford, Conn.

Services will be at 1:30 p.m. Friday in Chalfant-Perry-Klaehn Funeral Home, where calling will be 2 to 5 and 7 to 9 p.m. Thursday. Burial will be in Lindenwood Cemetery.

Pallbearers will be Paul Clark, Robert H. Dreisback, Paul R. Hosler, Eugene W. Klepfer, Fred J. Reynolds and Dr. H. Vaughn Scott. Honorary pallbearers are Chester C. Ludwig, Dr. Lawrence W. Mueller, Dr. Richard W. Terrill, Harold W. McMillen, Dale W. McMillen, Arthur M. Paulison, Phil J. Schwanz and members of Jento.
